n) (Work in progress or submitted):

- 1) Royal Scam: The Great Potosí Mint Fraud of 1649. Guggenheim Fellowship book project based on eight years of archival research. Finishing ms. (nine core chapters drafted) for submission to Yale University Press by May 2020.
- 2) Basques & Vicuñas: A Documentary History. With translator Timothy F. Johnson. Under contract with the University of Nevada Press as of Feb.2020.
- 3) "Friends of Potosí," a web platform and archive intended for scholars and lay persons with an interest in this important mining city: <http://friendsofpotosi.tulane.edu/>
- 4) "Piratas del Mar del Sur, Historias verdaderas (1577-1830)," co-authored book with Prof. Sabrina Guerra of the U. de San Francisco, Quito. We have five of eight chapters drafted, and are working with Editorial Planeta in Bogotá.
- 5) "Luis Capoché's Report on the Imperial Villa of Potosí," an annotated translation of this 1585 description of the colonial Americas' most famous mining town, with supplementary descriptions. Discussing with the University of Texas Press.
- 6) This New Kingdom: Colombia Under the Habsburgs. A book manuscript just taking shape in outline form, partly meant to tell the story of Colombia in the c.160-yr. period before that treated in depth by Anthony McFarlane in Colombia before Independence. Having collected numerous regional stories from the archives, plus the printed colonial works of Castellanos, Aguado, Vargas Machuca, Simón, Rodríguez Freyle, and Mercado, the model I have in mind is closer to Irving Leonard's Baroque Times in Old Mexico. This one will take a few years, but begs to be done. A gold/green N. Andes counterpoint to the standard silver/dry Andes tale.
- 7) Rivers of Gold: Chapters in the History of Colombian Slavery, book manuscript in progress based on four published articles and ongoing research comparing mine slavery with that of sugarcane estates and livestock ranches in the greater Cauca region (Cali/Popayán), mostly focused on the 18th century (c.2-3 more years to complete). Based almost entirely on untouched archival material housed in Quito.
