Is studying French in college useful for a career?

French for Professional Purposes

France is the world's fifth biggest economic power and third-ranking destination for foreign investment, which makes the ability to speak French a great asset on the international job market. Fluency in French, particularly in professional French, will give you an edge on the international job market, opening the doors to French companies, in France and in francophone parts of the world.

In the United States, French dual degree majors are very marketable when applying for graduate programs or looking for jobs. Today, with French being the third most requested language on the American labor market, their career opportunities are virtually limitless.

Professional French at Tulane University

If you want to learn French for professional purposes, our specialized courses will prepare you to communicate effectively in your career sector. They are designed to help you incorporate your French skills into a variety of future workplaces.

In addition, you will have the possibility to graduate with two degrees at once, combining your Bachelor of Arts or Master's Degree with a degree in Professional French (Diplôme de Français Professionnel), certified by the Paris Chamber of Commerce and Industry (CCI).

At Tulane, you will have the opportunity to obtain the CCI Diplôme de Français Professionnel in the following fields:

- Business
- Tourism and Hotel Industry
- International Relations

We look forward to welcoming you to our Professional French Program!
